INDONESIA

Indonesia's textile and apparel industry is a substantial pillar of the national economy. Providing employment to nearly 2 million people, the industry plays a crucial role in sustaining livelihoods across the nation. This sector represents not just employment but also skill development, innovation, and entrepreneurship, contributing significantly to Indonesia's GDP. In 2024, the Indonesian textile and apparel market is not just a symbol of cultural identity but also a cornerstone of the national economy.

*BY 2025

Younger generations, especially Gen Z and millennials, increasingly support brands that are transparent, ethical, and eco-friendly. At the same time, innovations such as organic waste-based fabrics, biodegradable fibers, and blockchain for supply chain transparency are accelerating this trend.

In Indonesia, sustainable fashion awareness is growing, particularly in major cities, with movements like Tukar Baju, Fashion Revolution Indonesia, and Zero Waste introducing slow fashion to the public. With stronger collaboration among designers, government, and industry, Indonesia has the potential to become a rising force in global sustainable fashion
